¹The Information Commissioner’s Office states that individuals have the right to access their personal data. “Even if a child is too young to understand the implications of subject access rights it is still the right of the child rather than of anyone else such as a parent or guardian”. So it is the right of the child to have access to the information that is held about them even though it is likely to be exercised by those with parental responsibility for them. Before access is granted there are a number of things which should be taken into account for example: level of maturity; nature of personal data; Court orders relating to parental access or responsibility etc. These can be found on the ICO website under Children and Subject Access. In England the level of maturity or competency to understand the information is usually accepted to be 13 plus unless it can be evidenced that a younger child has the level of maturity.
